In a letter to his friend Charles Dilke written 4 March 1820, Keats somewhat funnily writes: "Brown has been mightily progressing with his Hogarth. A damn'd melancholy picture it is, and during the first week of my illness it gave me a psalm-singing nightmare that made me almost faint away in my sleep.

John Keats - Wikipedia

—John Keats, August 1820. John Keats's last known letter to his beloved Fanny Brawne was written in August of 1820. To think that this was perhaps the last letter he ever wrote to her is utterly heartbreaking. It is so heartbreaking that I cannot even write about it—not at this present moment, at least.
