Missing Reels Farran Smith Nehme

MISSING REELS, set in Manhattan in the late 1980s, is a paean to early filmdom. I enjoyed the way the author wove an abundance of early cinematic references into the narrative. Sure, she includes megastars, such as Cary Grant, and Garbo, but also on hand are nods to lesser-knowns, à la director Leo McCarey and leading lady Vilma Banky.

Farran Smith Nehme (Author of Missing Reels)

Farran Smith Nehme is one of the smartest, most elegant writers on classic and silent film that you can find. She blogs at her own site called Self-Styled Siren, and writes for publications from Film Comment to the New York Post. The chances are that you will recognise some of the characters in Missing Reels, Smith Nehme's debut novel, also.

Now Farran Smith Nehme can add “published novelist” to her resume. Nehme’s debut novel Missing Reels goes on sale in a few weeks but I had the wonderful opportunity of meeting Nehme at Book Expo America earlier this year and received a signed advance readers copy of the book. The story takes place in late 1980s New York.
