Rich Christians in an Age of Hunger - Thomas Nelson

It's a question adapted from Ron Sider's provocatively-titled Rich Christians in an Age of Hunger, first published in 1978. It's easy to get defensive over this title, because most of us don't consider ourselves rich. We know lots of people wealthier than us, who live in larger houses, drive nicer cars and go on more elaborate vacations.

Its title leaves open the possibility that Ron Sider is talking about people rather than his book, Rich Christians in an Age of Hunger. But, indeed, his address was more about the book than rich Christians themselves, although they remain present in the wings, just off-stage. Dr. Sider's controversial, landmark book was published in 1977.

While there is a strong and proven correlation between education and income, it's harder to know whether there also is a link between religion and wealth. What we can say is that members of some religious groups - not to mention atheists and agnostics - on average have a higher household income than others and those in the richest religious groups also tend, on average, to be better ...

(vanillapics via Getty Images) Most American adults self-identify as Christians. But many Christians also hold what are sometimes characterized as "New Age" beliefs - including belief in reincarnation, astrology, psychics and the presence of spiritual energy in physical objects like mountains or trees. Many Americans who are religiously unaffiliated also have these beliefs.

Question: "How should a Christian view wealth?" Answer: The Christian view of wealth should be derived from the Scriptures. There are many times in the Old Testament that God gave riches to His people. Solomon was promised riches and became the richest of all the kings of the earth (1 Kings 3:11-13; 2 Chronicles 9:22); David said in 1 Chronicles 29:12: "Wealth and honor come from you; you ...
