Throughout The Kite Runner, Amir longs for the former peace of Afghanistan, for the smells of Afghan food in the markets, and the pomegranate tree he once sat under with Hassan. In the last scene of the novel, when Amir kite-fights in America with Sohrab in tow, he imagines “white-clad trees” and smells “sawdust and walnuts,” markings of his home country.

A cynical cash in of a book that was written, cynically, to cash in on certain notoriety, by a man in a already excellently paid profession.

Inappropriately rated as PG-13 in the US & just as inappropriately rated as 12A in the UK...The people responsible for this should either get their heads examined or stop taking bribes imo.
